Excerpt from The Moving Picture Boy entry on Alyosha Chertvoff:

“The central narrative of Nikolai Gubenko’s fine "PODRANKI" - generally known as "ORPHANS" in Britain and the USA - is a flashback into the narrator’s past life as a war orphan at a children’s home after World War Two: a tough establishment with an honestly portrayed mixture of good and bad teachers.

...The smaller but no less impressive role of the vengeful Valya Ganedin, who blows himself up while attempting to lob a home-made grenade into an enclosure of German prisoners - a performance of painful intensity - is in fact taken by a girl, the remarkable Natalya Gundareva.”
